record. Additionally, if a person is no longer employed by the RCMP they are no longer subject to Code of Conduct, and any on-going internal Code of Conduct investigations would cease.

In this case, should there have been allegations of misconduct related to one of our officers in relation to this investigation, these allegations would have been disclosed to the BC Prosecution Service (BCPS) and assessed with respect to the potential impact on prosecution.

It is our understanding that the charge assessment and subsequent stay of proceedings made by the BCPS is unrelated to the conduct of any RCMP members or employees.
